THE CHICKASAW NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE
There are times when we all need to unwind and enjoy the outdoors and you have many options to do that at the Chickasaw National Wildlife Refuge. You may enjoy observing the refuge from the viewing tower, exploring trails, driving the roads in search of wildlife, or making memories by hunting alongside a friend or family member. It has the largest tract of bottomland hardwood forest in Tennessee, and lies in the Lower Mississippi River floodplain with eight miles of the refuge's western boundary adjoining the Mississippi River. This area of land contains thousands of acres that includes lakes, forests, streams, scenic overlooks, the Mississippi River shoreline, wildlife, and fascinating history.

TULLY STATE FOREST
This property has been managed for years by the Tennessee Wildlife Resources Agency (TWRA) as a wildlife management area. As the only state forest representing western Tennessee's physiographic region, it is covered in Mississippi River alluvial bottomland hardwoods and holds some of the state's best hunting and fishing lands. It is only the second state forest established in the last half-century.
